Outside The Box

Last week we did a little exercise to make us think creatively and “draw outside the lines.” We also brainstormed about some things we could do to bring up spiritual things in our conversations or let our faith show to people outside the church. We saw that whether we are home schooled or public or private schooled, there are things that we can do that let people see our practice of walking with Jesus. All of those things are us “thinking outside the box.” So many times we hear certain words like evangelism, or “sharing our faith,” and we automatically go in our minds to a certain preset idea. We think about using a tract, or going up to a stranger and telling them point blank about Jesus. Those methods are okay and have a place, but I want us to start getting creative with this task of reaching our world with the Gospel. It’s a fun job, but if we keep doing it the same old way, we can get bored and people can get bored with us. So let’s think outside of our little boxes and start getting messy with the crayons. Some of the best paintings and works of art don’t have those thin black lines that define each object, the colors run together and blend artistically. That’s where we get to be with our faith. God is a big God and He won’t be confined to our small idea of Him, and His message is too good to be kept in a boring little box. What ideas do you have? What big dreams has God planted in your heart? Write me and let me hear them!
